

Abstract

How nanoparticles interact with membranes is central for understanding their bioactivity. Here we introduce some results about wrapping of single and multiple nanoparticles by membranes, including the important role of the particles' elastic properties on wrapping and tubulation of nanoparticles on vesicles.